A story set in a village experiencing the pains of industrialization when the city-bred son of the town's timber processing factory owner replaces workers with machines and then introduces a bus to replace the taxi-carts which ferry pilgrims from the railway station to the nearby temple. Shankar, one of the cart drivers, wagers a bet that in three months time, his cart can outrace the bus to the temple. If he wins, the displaced workers will keep their jobs. The villagers at first shun Shankar, but then decide that they have nothing to lose in fighting the machines and they help Shankar build a road that will take six miles off the route to the temple. Unfortunately, Shankar and his best friend Krishan have fallen out over a girl and Krishan seeks revenge.
